Chautauqua Festival Closes

The United Chautauqua Festival closed a three-day program Friday evening with the play, "The Family Up Stairs", which was one of the best ever presented here in a Chautauqua program.

The comedy was one of middle class family life with all its little near-tragedies, loves and follies which brought forth one laugh on top of another.

Miss Anitak Ball, on the first day's program, gave a pleasing variety entertainment, followed by Laurant, the Magician.

The famous Trio from Honolulu presented the afternoon prelude to Mrs. Albert Vierra's travel talk in which she described the life of happy Hawaii and its people. A spectacular musical production "Isle of Paradise", was presented the second evening by Vierra's Hawaiians. A flaming volcano and light house in the back ground gave a setting which brought Hawaii before the audience as nothing else could. The lecture given by Hon Judge Morris Anderson was much enjoyed

Friday afternoon was circus day for the children after which the Metropolitan Artists presented a "Merry - Go - Round" program of music and costume impersonations

The Chautauqua will not return next year

Family Takes Paper Seventy-two Years

When the publishers offered a year's subscription to the family that has taken the ADVERTISER the longest time, with a mark to 63 years to shoot at, it looked as if Mrs. Fennimore Cooper would win the prize. Now that is by the boards, and a new mark has been set for all the old timers to aim at.

Mrs. Frank Martin of Maple Street holds the present laurel wreath for continuous subscription.

Previous to the Civil War when E. M. Johnson owned the paper, Mrs. Martin's father, the late William Lawton, subscribed to it, and his son, Albert Lawton served as an apprentice in the Advertiser shop. Early in the Civil War Albert Lawton enlisted in the company organized by Captain Sanford.

Mrs. Martin states that the paper has been taken by some member of her family from that day to this, a total of some 72 years.

Now, who can beat that record?

ADDISON BASEBALL TEAM

The ADVERTISER presents herewith a picture of the Addison Base Ball team of the Tri-County League, which has just closed one of the most successful seasons since the formation of the League. The first year that the League was formed, Addison won the pennant, but since that time the locals have just about managed to play fifty-fifty ball and this year the League records show that Addison has finished considerably above that figure, having won 11 games and lost 9 in League competition for a standing of .550. This mark placed Addison in fourth place in the final standings. Blossburg won the pennant this year with Mansfield second, Elkland third and Addison fourth, one whole game ahead of Corning and Tioga who tied for fifth place, in the twelve-team League. This is a very good standing for a town the size of Addison, stacked up against eight larger towns and cities. The team has played first class ball and given the fans some great entertainment throughout the season. Local fans may well be proud of the showing of the Addison team ably managed by Edwin Morris, for the past three years.

Some of the high points of the season are that Addison has not been shut out during the season. On the other hand, Addison has scored but one shut out, that against Elkland at that place with McDermott pitching. Grange and Ripley have twice held the opposition to a single run. Addison also lost three games by a single run. Addison started the season by winning the first four games against Tioga, Mansfield, Westfield and Painted Post and led the League by a clean margin of two games. The locals then lost to Morris Run and Galeton on successive Sundays, but with a victory over Knoxville were still tied for the lead on June 20. Losses to Wellsboro and Painted Post then followed and the locals dropped to third place. They came back to a tie for second the next two weeks by

Field Day Is Very Successful

More Than One Thousand People in Attendance— Excellent Marks at Skeet, Trap and Rifle Range.

Over one thousand people attended the second annual field day of the Addison Fish and Game Club, held at the organization's private field on the McCarthy farm last Sunday. Receipts exceeded those of a year ago by a considerable margin and officials of the club were greatly pleased at the success attained.

The program started at nine o'clock in the morning and continued until approximately five o'clock in the afternoon. C. E. Clinton was the winner of the prize in the coon chase event while Frank Hallett of Cameron Mills carried off second honors. Other entries in this event were D. Rhodes of Elmira, Ray Farrand of Bath, Leo Bates, Fred Hauff and Rusley Bates.

First prize in the fox chase which started at 11:30 A. M. was awarded to D. Rhodes of Elmira. Second prize went to W. J. Stewart of Hornell. Additional entries were Ernest Allen, Harry Cisco, both of Addison; and Horace Rowley of Horseheads. The gate prize, a beagle pup, went to LaVerne Towner of Coopers Plains.

In the skeet event, first prize went to J. E. Eisenhart of Elmira Heights.

Deep Well At Cameron Mills Strikes Small Amount of Gas

McCorkle well, drilled by F. E. Fields, finds Oriskany sand too "tight" for commercial production — Location proved to be on structure.

A slight amount of gas was struck the first of this week in the McCorkle well at Cameron Mills, but the volume was not sufficient for commercial use. Drilling has continued at the well, the owners being determined not to give up hopes of bringing in a "gaser" until the bottom of the sand is reached.

The unfavorable outcome of the McCorkle well, will be a distinct disappointment to many people who hoped to see a deep gas development in the vicinity of Cameron Mills. The McCorkle well was located by F. E. Fields, who picked the spot for a test after painstaking, personal geology study. Unfortunately, when the Oriskany sand was cut by the bit, it proved to be too "tight" or dense, to act as a reservoir for any large amount of gas.

The fact that gas was encountered in the Oriskany, though in small quantity, fully justifies Mr. Field's study of the region. For a well, no matter how carefully located on a structure, cannot produce gas unless the sand is porous enough to hold it, through the millions of years the crust of this earth has been forming. A similar situation prevailed at the Perkins deep test well drilled by the Standard Oil Company near Addison a few years ago. The well was located by one of the most reliable geologists in the east, and proved to be on structure, but the Oriskany sand was almost flint hard and produced no gas.

Hope for a more open sand at Cameron Mills, was held out by the result of the three tests made approximately a year and a half ago at Thurston and Campbell. These wells all showed a decidedly open textured Oriskany sand, and the owners of the McCorkle gambled on the hope this condition would prevail as far southwest from Thurston as Cameron Mills.

The McCorkle well was started first as a shallow well, being the most westerly in the Rathbone field, when located about one year ago. A promising flow of shallow gas was struck at different levels up to 1,600 feet, and the well was turned into the Donovan pipe line for a time, but the pressure dwindled to a point gas could not be forced into the line. This summer Mr. Fields decided to drill the well on down to the Oriskany making a deep test of the location. Despite the fact little encouragement could be obtained from the big companies holding acreage, the wildcat well was finally driven to the deep sand, with disappointing results.

Former Jasper Minister's Wife Dies at Waverly

Jasper—Mrs. Cora Crawford, former resident of Jasper, died last week at the home of her sister in Waverly. Mrs. Crawford was the widow of the late Albert Crawford who was pastor of the Jasper-Hedgesville Presbyterian Churches for several years preceding the turn of the present century. Leaving that charge, Mr. Crawford received a call to Oakfield where he preached until until ill health caused his retirement.

Mrs. Crawford taught in the Ithaca schools for many years before her marriage. Following Mr. Crawford's retirement the couple purchased a home in Ithaca, where Mrs. Crawford has continued to spend her summers, living with her sister during the winter months.

S. B. Minstrels Will Please Large Audience Friday

Addison High Auditorium Will Be Filled for Second Appearance of Soap Box Minstrels Tomorrow Evening—100 Students to Take Part—Band Will Please.

The Second Edition of the SOAP BOX MINSTRELS will be hot off the press tomorrow evening, Friday, October 13, at 8:00 p. m. Seats well be at a premium so those planning to go better arrive early and not be disappointed. Of course, there are 800 seats, but they are selling for such a small price each regardless of size that nearly 400 were reported sold on Monday morning—the cry is "more tickets, I want more tickets."

Now something about the show. The director should tell you nothing, but you must not miss the A. H. S. Band of more than 40 children plus about 60 others who will sing, dance and do specialties. Here are just a few of the 55 numbers that go to make up the program—"Lazy Bones" sung by Ralph and Gloria Vona; "Let Me Call You Lizzy" by "Tiny" Rodney of the 2nd grade; Stunts by John Webster; "Red River Valley" by Jr. Reynolds and others too numerous to mention.

Here is something to think about—There will be a large group of children on the stage to perform for you, and they will do a better piece of work if they have a large and appreciative audience. Further more it is cheaper to come to this show than it is to stay at home, for you will burn up more than the price of admission in electricity listening to the radio.

First Registration Day Saturday

Next Saturday and the following Saturday, October 14 and 21, are Registration Days this fall. The polls will be open on October 14 from 7:00 a. m. until 10:00 p. m On October 21 voters will be able to register between 1:00 p. m. and 10:00 p. m.

Changes have been made this year in the absentee ballot law, which makes it mandatory for the voter desiring to vote away from home, to apply in person at the registration place in his district, for his absentee ballot. Members of the Registration Board have power to issue absentee ballots or reject the application, as they judge the merits of the case.

Miss Jenn Brotzman and Linn Brotzman of Elmira spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Brotzman.

Viaduct May Open Sunday

The new viaduct over the Erie railroad near Gang Mills will be opened to traffic on Sunday next, October 15th, provided the concrete is sufficiently "cured" by that time, according to information given out this week by officials in charge of the work.

Employees of the Ludington Construction Company were puttin the fininshing touches on the viaduct construction work several days ago, and preparations were under way to turn traffic onto the overhead at that time.

Rally Day At Methodist Church

Rally Day will be observed in the Woodhull Methodist Church October 15th. All members of the church and church school are cordially invited to attend the service next Sunday.

There will be a special program for the occasion. Paul Carpenter and the Faulk Brothers from Corning will have charge of the Rally Day program and will also sing at the morning service.

Lunch will be served at 12:30 in the dining room of the church.

Rally Day At Baptist Church

Rally Day will be observed at the Baptist Church Sunday during the Sunday school hour. A program will be presented by the Sunday school members.

Construction of Road Underway

Construction work on the new highway leading from Addison to the Erie overhead at the Broken Ridges, is now well underway. A. E. Slater of Corning is superintendent of the work.

The former Metro gas station on Front Street has been leased from E. L. Gayvert and Company, Inc., by the Paterson Construction Co., contractors on this piece of highway. Office quarters will be established in this building.

Work on this highway so far this fall, has been confined to making the preliminary fills for the new sections of this road where it will leave the old right of way. At the Addison end of the road a big fill is being made from a point approximately at the middle of Cowley Hill, out across the Hickey swamp to where the new road will join the old route a few hundred feet west of Niagra Creek bridge. At the farther end of the project considerable steam shovel work is being done on the Broken Ridges, straightening curves, cutting downthe grade to make the approach to the overhead bridge conform to 1933 standards of construction for thru highways. Material for the fill across the Hickey swamp is being taken from the D. H. Orr farm at the north side of Cowley Hill.

These fills will be given time to settle during the winter, ready for pouring concrete on the new roadbed next year.

At the present time approximately thirty men are employed on this piece of highway construction.

To be most useful a table lamp should have a shade which flares enough to allow a wide distribution of the light.

SWIFT—SURE JUSTICE

Four persons, the first tried under the new "Lindbergh Law", received life sentences last week, for kidnaping Urschel, the millionaire oil man. Thus swift, severe, yet deserved punishment has been meted out to a set of offenders, the nature of whose crime should merit little leniency.

Society, which has been long-suffering, lethargic and almost indifferent to encroachments of rampant criminals, has at last roused itself from the stupor to strike out at an offense that stirs the blood of even the most callous citizen. For kidnaping is a crime that gives neither the just, nor unjust one hour of peace. Unsolved it is worse than murder, leaving the friends of the victim constantly the prey of agonized thoughts that spin endlessly and unanswered like the blades of a windmill always reaching for the wind, yet never able to hold it.

Crime allied to politics, can bridge many streams of law designed to drown the lawbreakers; but once the rank and file of Society becomes thoroughly aroused, even the bridges of special privilege can crumble under the wrongdoers' feet. Every good citizen now fervently hopes that the awakening of justice will not halt with the task of dealing justice to the offenders against the kidnaping laws, but will go on with the crusade and rid the country of its social rats which have been gnawing at the vitals of Law and Order for the past decade and a half.

Our road is necessarily up or down. We must, as a people, throw off the yoke of the racketeers, the murderers, the bootleggers, the kidnapers, the robbers, the forgers and all enemies of Society with their hordes of lawyer protectionists; or our way as a nation will of needs lower this country to those standards. A tree can only support a certain amount of fungus growth before it, too, becomes soft and rotten, tumbling down among the other dead things at its roots.

The shortest road to social up-lift will be a route of rapid trails with a minimum of trumpet blare, meting swift, severe justice to our lawbreakers.

A TAXLESS TOWN—AND IT'S NO DREAM

Here's a news item that sounds like a modern Arabian Nights tale—an American town of 10,000 people whose inhabitants pay no taxes—no taxes at all! This taxless town is Chanute, Kansas. Its existence and magic claim to fame has just been uncovered by Ben James, a staff writer for the Country Home. Ben James regards his discovery as so important that he has sent advance copies of his article on this miracle-town to a number of editors. From these advance proofs, it is revealed that all the costs of running this magic community are paid by the profits derived from city-owned utilities including water, gas and electricity.

The mayor of Chanute is H. W. Loy, who is described as "a middle-aged chap with a sharp straight nose, a firm chin, and a fedora hat which he wears aggressively on the side of his head."

Municipal ownership started in Chanute 40 years ago, when the city, after much haggling and indecision, built a water plant at a cost of $44,000. Today the water plant has grown until it is worth $500,000 and pays a sweet profit.

Chanute's municipal gas and electric plants have had a similar history, and the city government is able to meet depression with a grin and a smile. "There are even a few visionaries", Ben James remarks, "who wonder whether the time won't come when the city will be able to pay an annual dividend to all its inhabitants."

Naturally one wonders whether the people of Chanute don't pay a pretty high price for water, gas and electricity. But Mr. James gives the figures, and shows that Chanute is served cheaper than any of the neighboring Kansas communities.

"The city of Chanute," according to Mr. James, "buys, produces and delivers gas, water and electricity to its consumers at cheaper rates than does any city or marketing company in the state."

"It is significant that the two most regulated and controlled economic activities in this country, the incorporated banks and the railroads, suffered most from the depression"

—George E. Sokolsky

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

An interesting case should soon be attracting wide-spread attention through the country—that of Lawyer Frederick B. Campbell, versus the Federal courts. On it will hang a test of whether the guarantees given our citizens are real and actual, or whether they be mere scraps of paper, to be discarded at the moment of bethought policy, by an executive seeking ways to end a depression.

In October, 1932 and January 1933, Campbell made the Chase National Bank of New York, his hired custodian of gold bullion valued at that time, $135,000. On March 9, this year, Congress passed the Emergency Banking act, making it illegal for citizens to hold gold. On April 5, President Roosevelt issued an executive order for all holders of more than $100 in gold to turn it into the treasury for exchange for paper money. On August 28 he issued another order requiring every possessor of gold to register his holdings with the Treasury before September 18.

On September 16 Campbell appeared at the Chase National, demanded his 27 bars of gold. Was told the bank could not deliver to him, but must surrender the gold to the Government in accordance with the President's orders. September 27 Campbell started a civil suit against Chase National for his gold, now worth some two hundred thousand Roosevelt dollars. September 27 a Federal grand jury indicted Campbell for failure to register his gold.

Thus there has started in the Supreme Court a test case of the Roosevelt anti-hoarding policy. Countless citizens will watch this case with breathless interest. Lawyer Campbell knows that in standing trial he not only risks a $10,000 fine, but a prison sentence of ten years and disbarment as well. His argument for his own defense will be: "Congress has no Constitutional power to delegate its legislative authority over gold to the President, and the President is prevented by the 5th Amendment to the Constitution (due process of law) from depriving him of his property."

In other words Campbell is going to all this risk to fight for his constitutional rights and says, "If I have to go to jail, I don't care."

Many people have doubtless wondered, if the Government can deprive them of their rights to hold gold, what property, if any might not be pre-emptorily seized by call of the chief executive. This is, indeed, a grave question, and should stretch the "gray matter" of our chief justices, like nothing has since the Civil War.

FIBBER HOWE

Louis McHenry Howe, confidential secretary to the President, might well watch out lest he be given the sobriquet of "Henry the Fibber".

The night before Joe McKee declared his candidacy for the mayorship of New York, reporters found Mr. Howe in Mr. Roosevelt's Manhattan home, quizzed him regarding the finger of the Administration in New York's political pot. "I have neither seen nor communicated with anybody relative to the New York campaign since I've been here", said Colonel Howe.

A maid entered the room.

"Mr. Howe", she said, "Mr. Flynn is on the telephone again."

"What a coincidence!" marveled Mr. Howe. And the reporters, who knew boss Flynn had been in conference with Postmaster General Jim Farley for two days over the McKee matter, marveled too, at Colonel Howe's apparent little "Fib."

Surely, there is no truth in a politician.

SMALL HOPE FOR WILL'S HOPE

While flying over Hoover Dam on a recent air trip from Chicago to the Coast, Will Rogers dropped off his daily message to newspapers. One of his remarks was:

"Hope they don't irrigate more land so they can raise more things they can't sell, and will have to plow up more rows, kill more pigs to keep 'em from becomin' hogs."

Our politicians still talk glibly of pouring new millions into irrigation schemes to make more farms out of waste land and deserts, thus boosting over-production of agricultural crops, which another group of politicians will expect the taxpayers to pay for, to bring about farm relief.

CRYING MAYORS

The Public Works Program includes an expenditure in excess of $1,750,000,000 for State and municipal projects — and yet a lot of cry-boy Mayors have recently met in Chicago and passed resolutions in favor of new laws to enable cities to go bankrupe. The Mayors say the cities cannot pay their bondholders; therefore they propose to freeze out the investors in their municipal bonds. Shame on such political schemes. Let's have more cheerful mayors!

FLIGHTS FROM THE BIRDHOUSE

By Rev. J. V. AXTELL

The Spider in the Bath Tub

Oh how the mistress of the Manse dislikes spiders! She knows they destroy flies and hornets, but she wishes that Mr. Spider had some less annoying way of catching the pests. The spider web is very vexing to all housekeepers, but the spider is at a disadvantage without his web. He traps his prey with it, he gets about by means of it, and it helps him out of many a tight place. Shylock in Shakespeare's play, The Merchant of Venice said, "You destroy my house when you destroy the prop on which my house rests." You take away the web from the spider and he could not live.

Some time ago I found a spider in our bathtub. He was trying to climb up its glazed sides and was not making out well. He was just as persistent as the one Robert Bruce of Scotland saw. You remember how the spider taught Robert Bruce not to get discouraged no matter how many times he lost a battle, but to keep on fighting until he won. A spider knows nothing about quitting. He tries until he dies. So this fellow I found in the bathtub would climb up the slippery side until he reached a point where the sides were straight up and down when he would slip back to the bottom. Then he would start all over again. I knew he would keep on trying, but he never could get out unless he was helped. His feet would not help him and he could not attach his web to anything. He probably had come by way of his web, but from some cause he had lost connection with it. A spider must have something high to attach his web to. This one was without that and he found himself in a bad plight.

If your lives are to be successful, boys and girls, you will have to attach them to something higher. It is the only way.

In school you pull yourselves to a higher grade, on through high school, some of you through college and still higher schools. In business you "begin at the bottom and work up." If you work in a factory you are set at a task that is simple and are given more difficult things to do as you prove yourself worthy. If you become trustworthy and skillful and good it will be because you have high aims that are fastened to something higher up by which you raise yourself. That is what Ralph Waldo Emerson meant when he said, "Hitch your wagon to a star." You succeed by means of your higher attachments; the ripe experience and deep love of parents, the contact with school and teachers, good literature, the hook-up with the Church an dGod.

How sad when you have lost hold of the high. Look at the folks in our reformatories and prisons. They lost their high attachments. See the poor drug addict and drunkard. They lost their high attachments. See the poor girl who leads the younger ones into bad ways, the loafer, the ne'er-do-well. They have lost their high attachments like the poor spider in the bathtub. "The fault is not in their stars but in themselves that they are underlings."

It has been truthfully said that our lives are hung by a slender cord. It may be like a spider's web. It is therefore always safer and wiser to fasten that slender cord to God above us, the given of all things high and noble and good.

Another Special Session Will Cost New Yorkers Thousands

Albany, Oct. 10—Another special session of the Legislature is to be held to keep New York from going on the financial rocks as a result of the inefficiency, corruption, extravagance and graft which has marked the administration of that city's affairs by the Tammany organization. This will be the third session held for that purpose within 11 months. The last one, which adjourned only 17 days ago, cost the taxpayers of the State $114,000. At a special session only those matters can be considered which the Governor proposes. The Democratic Governor and the Democratic Senate thus have matters entirely in their own hands so far as concerns the introduction of legislation. The Republican Assembly is limited to opposing measures considered unwise and injurious.

Twice helped, Still in Trouble

Last December New York City found itself unable to meet its obligations. Money was needed for payment of salaries, for payment of interest on the city's two and a half billions of indebtedness, for unemployment relief. Its credit was so poor that the bankers would not advance a dollar without a pledge of economy of some sort. The city proposed to economize—not by dismissing any of its thousands of highly-paid and useless hangers-on, or eliminating any of the millions of graft to contractors and other favorites, but by cutting the wages of school teachers, firemen, policemen and other employees. Some of these were fixed by law and the consent of the Legislature had to be given to change them. Distasteful as it was, the Republicans in the Assembly gave enough votes to enact these changes, rather than see the city go into bankruptcy.

* * *

The Second Brazen Proposal

The relief was only temporary. Cutting wages of teachers, firemen and others and leaving untouched the big graft and extravagance soon brought the city again to the verge of bankruptcy, even though the administration dipped into its sinking fund and other specific funds which should have been left untouched. Again Tammany appealed to the Legislature, making the specious plea that the funds it now sought were needed for unemployment relief. Then it made a brazen proposal. It asked that the present sales tax of one per cent be doubled all over the state, the lion's share of the increase to go to New York. Only the fact that the state has a Republican Assembly prevented that measure from being passed. Instead of such a tax the city was given power to impose upon its own residents any taxes that the state has power to impose. The city passed a number of such tax bills, among them five cents on each taxi fare, four cents per share on stock transfers, five per cent on gross income of all dealers in securities, fifty per cent increase in water rates, one-fourth per cent on the value of the investments of all savings banks and insurance companies. All applied to New York City alone.

Gave the Tiger a Scare

This raised a furore. The New York Stock Exchange arranged to move across to New Jersey. Insurance companies and savings banks declared they would buy no more of the city's bonds. Again the coffers were empty, with millions needed to pay bond interest, for salaries, and for unemployment relief. The Tiger was frightened. It asked for a conference with the bankers and with Governor Lehman. On its knees it pleaded for aid to avoid bankruptcy on the eve of a city election. It promised many things, among others that Mayor O'Brien would veto the tax on stock transfers and security dealers and the tax on insurance companies and savings banks. It agreed to protect the bankers and their depositors from loss by pledging taxes yet to be collected. As a result of the agreement reached in the conference, the city has been able to get money to meet its pressing needs. The agreement must be confirmed by the Legislature, and it is for this purpose that the third special session will be held—the first time in history to hold two specials in a single calendar year.

* * *

Fusion Cause is City's Hope

In the New York City election there are nine candidates for Mayor and there is talk that paper ballots may have to be substituted for voting machines. Only three candidates will figure to any extent, however. Major LaGuardia, the Fusion candidate, has led from the first and is meeting tremendous receptions in his campaign, just getting under way. Mayor O'Brien, candidate for re-election, is doing nothing as yet, but will have the support of the Tammany organization. Seeing the Tiger on the run, Joseph V. McKee, who was Mayor for a few months last fall, was put into the picture by Secretary of State Flynn, Democratic boss of the Bronx, and State and National Chairman Farley. The contest between O'Brien and McKee thus becomes really a fight between Curry and Flynn for control of the Democratic organization of New York City. With the election of either, the old method of government and most of the old parasites will remain. The only hope for such a cleaning up as New York City needs lies with the Fusion cause and the candidacy of Major LaGuardia.

* * *

Why Up-State is Interested

The New York City situation is of interest to the people all over the state for a couple of reasons. One is that it furnishes a fine example of the sort of government to be expected if the Tammany crowd, which has been in complete control of this city, should gain control of the Legislature by electing a majority to the Assembly. The other is that it illustrates the disposition of Tammany to tax the people of the whole state to make up for its own graft and mismanagement.

New England Trip Enjoyed

Rev. and Mrs. Kenneth E. Arnold Visit Historic Battlefields in Upper New York — Cross Over Green and White Mountains and Traverse Renowned Mohawk Trail.

A delightful motor trip through several New England states featured the vacation period of the Rev. and Mrs. Kenneth E. Arnold, who returned recently to Addison, after four weeks away. Most of their vacation was spent as guests of Mrs. Arnold's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Rolles of Binghamton. The motor jaunt, however, occupied several days and enabled them to view some of the most gorgeous mountain scenery and to visit some of the outstanding historical spots in American history.

Starting from Binghamton on September 19, they traveled first to Albany, where they arrived at the Capitol building with fifteen minutes left before closing time. This was sufficient, however, to permit an inspection of the "Million-Dollar stair case", the assembly room and the senate chamber. They continued on through Troy, and stopped near Mechanicsville, where they stayed overnight at a tourist camp on the banks of the Hudson.

On Wednesday morning, they drove to Schuylerville, one of the villages most prominent during the Revolutionary War. A monument erected at this point commemorates one of the outstanding engagements of the war. A niche on each side is arranged for the four commanding officers who brought glory to the American cause. One niche, however, remains vacant; it is the one that would have gone to Benedict Arnold, had he not, following his valorous action at Schuylerville, proved unworthy of his trust at West Point.

The Block House was another point of interest which Rev. and Mrs. Arnold inspected. This house contains many relics of the Revolution. One which was found to be of especial interest was a piece of wood taken from the bridge at Concord where was finer the famous "shot heard 'round the world." Later on Wednesday morning they left the battlefield and proceeded on to Whitehall where dinner was enjoyed. During the afternoon they entered the Green Mountains of Vermont, where they chose a second class road leading directly across the mountain ranges. While traveling the road, Rev. Arnold had the doubtful distinction of killing a chicken, his first experience of the kind as a motorist, in which the owner demanded reimbursement.

The Rev. and Mrs. Arnold were especially impressed by the beauties of the Green Mountains A frost had already preceded them, and the leaves were turning in color, revealing a far more brilliant red than we get in this section.

At Montpelier they visited the State House and were especially impressed with a beautiful painting of Former President Calvin Coolidge which hung in the lobby of the building. The furnishings of the Senate Chamber were also noteworthy. All chairs in the chamber were alike, in that they were walnut, hair covered and of an early period design. In a large reception room of the Capitol, one wall is entirely covered by a large painting of the battle scene of Gettysburg. In one corner of this room was a large clock, the cabinet being made of ebony and handsomely carved from top to bottom. In the same room was a walnut table, six by four, oval in shape having a solid marble top.

From Montpelier, they continued on to Barre, some six miles distant, where they remained over night at a tourist camp near the city.

On Thursday morning, they ate breakfast in Vermont, traveled into New Hampshire for dinner and stayed overnight in Maine. The White Mountains which were viewed as the party passed over them in New Hampshire were somewhat higher than the Green Mountains. It was noticed that every peak seemed to be coated with a foggy mist which made it appear especially whilte. In Augusta, Maine, they were unable to view the interior of the State House as the building had closed for the day. Augusta is described as a city surrounded by hills. Leaving Augusta at between seven and eight in the evening, they continued south a few miles and stopped over at a tourist camp for the night.

On Friday the tourists drove down to Portland, Maine, going enroute through the park section of the city, which is described as a most beautiful and scenic spot. They followed the Boston Post road to Kennebeck, Me., where they stopped to view the LaFayette Elm. This famous tree has a spread of 131 feet, a girth of 17 feet, 5 inches. Its historical association dates back to the 25th of June, 1825, when Lafayette was entertained at the adjoining mansion.

Near Lowell, Mass. they struck out across the northern end of the state and onto the Mohawk trail, a beautiful roadway built at a cost of $345,000. They crossed the famous French King bridge, a single span structure 745 feet long and arching up to 135 feet above the Connecticut river. The bridge is located at Greenfield, Mass. and is the largest of its kind in the eastern states.

Friday night, Rev. and Mrs. Arnold remained over at a tourist camp near Shelburne Summit and then continued on the homeward stretch through a glamorous country, which carried them at one point around the famous Hairpin Curve, then on to Pittsfield, Mass. and Hudson, N. Y. Here they ferried over and drove to Catskill and then struck out through the land of Rip Van Winkle, to Lexington and Binghamton again.

Some road construction work was encountered in New York and New Hampshire. Bridge construction was underway in Vermont. Mr. Arnold stated that a distinctly optomistic feeling with respect to the business outlook seemed to prevail.

On September 17th, Mr. Arnold preached during the morning and evening services at the Park Avenue Baptist Church in Binghamton.

Games won 11, games lost 9.
Per cent .550.

Addison also played four exhibition games, all with Elkland, winning two and losing a like number. Two of these games were noteworthy in that Ripley and Freburg engaged in a fine pitchers' battle here on Labor Day, with the locals winning by a close score. In another game a week later at Elkland Freburg pitched a no-hit game against the locals to even the score, with Hopper pitching for Addison.

A fact worth noting in the season's record is the fact that no team in the League defeated Addison in both games of the season. Addison broke even with every team in the circuit, which was met in two games. Addison won both games played from two teams, namely Tioga and Knoxville. The locals for the second year started off leading the League with a winning streak of four straight games and closed with three straight games on the right side of the ledger. The team, however, ran into its most distressing streak during the latter part of July and early August when it lost five out of six games at one time. Two of these five games were lost by one run and were really hard luck games. Altogether the team made an excellent record for the season and one that all Addison may well be proud. The team has played clean, sportsmanlike ball and Manager Morris has never stood for any umpire baiting or rowdyism in any form from either players or fans. Several excellent players have been developed this year and with the experience of the past year behind them better League standings may be hoped for next year.

The Tri-County League this year was composed of twelve teams and it is believed that next year, either the number of teams will be reduced or that the circuit will be divided into two sections with a play off at the end. The present number of teams makes the distances between towns pretty long and thereby increases the operating expenses of the teams. It also makes it impossible for the teams to play each other more than twice during the season, which is entirely too few meetings to stir up rivalry between teams and towns. The relation of the Addison team and management is of the friendliest with every team in the League, but the managers of the League must realize that the League as constituted this year is not for the best interest of all concerned, or of any given team for that matter.

Three pitchers have appeared in the box for Addison during the past League season. To Don Grange fell the bulk of the box work. He pitched eleven complete games, winning six and losing five, and acted in a relief capacity once. McDermott pitched four games, losing three and winning one. He also acted in a relief role twice, once turning in a winning game in relief capacity. Ripley pitched the first three victories and Grange the last three wins. To MeDermott went the honor of pitching the only shut out that Addison handed out during the year, when he shut Elkland out at that place, in a pitchers' battle with Freburg.

The Addison team lined up as follows when what may well be considered the regular lineup was in action: pitchers, Ripley, Grange and McDermott; catcher, LaChance, first base, Riker; second base, Hewson; short stop, Young, Robbins; third base, Hickey, J. Grange; left field, J. Grange, Hoyt; center, Riffle; right, Laffkas, Brennan. Stowell, Whitmore. Hovey, Hadlock and Hopper also saw service in several games.

Cornell Football Team Played "Under Wraps" Defeating Richmond

Ithaca, N. Y., October 9, 1933—Coach Gilmour Dobie sat stoically on the side-lines Saturday, and watched his Varsity and second teams play under wraps to beat the veteran University of Richmond oufitt 28-7. Dobie was not out to pile up a large score, and he was being careful to reveal nothing of his strategy to scouts who were in the stands.

His survey of the team Saturday was the last Coach Dobie will be able to make of it in action before it leaves to meet Michigan next Saturday, October 14th. It is fifteen years since the two teams have met, last game, in 1917, resulting in a 42-0 victory for the westerners. Michigan's showing against Michigan State last Saturday makes it evident that Kipke has another good team, but Cornell folowers look to the Big Red team to give a good account of itself.

Reserve material is the big problem of the Cornell squad this year, and Dobie's second team plyaed for the entire fourth quarter and for most of the third quarter. They also saw some action in the first half. Richmond scored its touchdown against the reserves with but half a minute to play.

The varsity line consists of big, fast, seasoned men, but there are no players of equal calibre to take their places in case of necessity. It was the development of such men that Saturday's game was devoted. Stofer and the minute 144-pound Geoffrion showed up well in the backfield, and Meiss, Borger, J. Brown and Anderson performed capably on the line. If these men come along fast enough, the Big Red team wil lbe more sure of itself in the stern competition it will have to face later in tahe season.

The varsity itself put on two good exhibitions while it was on the field Saturday. Early in the first half, and again at the start of men pounded down the field to score three times Fredrick, a newcomer to the squad this year, was an outstanding man in the backfield, blocking fiercely and running hard and fast when he was given th bal.

"Walt" Switzer, a veteran ballcarrier, and acting-captain "Johnny" Ferraro, who with "Jake" Goldgas and Ferderick made up theVarsity backfield, did their usuas sterling work. SWitzer got off some good punts and Ferraro did placement kicking worthy of midseason. He converted four times for points after touchdown, and his kick-offs were long and well placed.

Several factors make Saturday's game a poor criterion for judging the play which Cornell may be expected to show later in the season. In the second half, Richmond's first time played against the inexperienced Cornell reserves, and the Cornell varsity played against the Richmond second team. Dobie was careful to show none of his tricks to scouts who were watching intently for indications of what may be expected against the strong opposition Cornell faces later in the autumn.

Junior Drivers Warned About Motor Laws

Chief of Police Bovee has asked the ADVERTISER to again bring the attention of Addison parents to the Junior License Law, which is being overstepped here in a number of cases.

Primarily this law, which allows boys and girls under eighteen to drive motor vehicles, is in effect for two principal reasons: To enable children to drive to school from a distance where other means of transportation are not available, and to permit young people to drive in case of necessity to further their parents' business.

The law does not permit boys or girls under eighteen to drive a car in the city, or to drive after dark. It is exceedingly specific on those points and both should be kept indelibly in mind by parents of Junior drivers. Check-ups over the state have revealed the fact that too large a proportion of New York's enormous accident toll is tracable to Junior drivers. Commissioner Harnett is insisting that all police officers be particularly firm in enforcing this law, thus doing their part to protect the general public.

In the last analysis laws governing motor vehicles are passed for the protection of the public. Some boys and girls under eighteen might drive with the discretion an older person should exercise, but because many young people do not have old heads on their shoulders it is necessary to curtail the driving of all Juniors. This is for their protection as well as other users of the highway, and parents must bear the fact in mind.

When a police officer finds a young person operating a car illegally, he has no choice in the matter and must carry out Mr. Harnett's instructions to arrest the offender.

"Prayer" is Topic At Union Service

Rev. J. V. Axtell Decrares That World Still Believes in Praying Men—Prayer Leaves Mark Upon Character, He Says.

"After all our lapses, the world still believes in praying men" declared the Rev. J. V. Axtell, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Addison, in speaking upon "Prayer" at Sunday evening's union service, held in the Baptist church.

Taking his text from the ninth chapter of the Book of Acts, last part of the eleventh verse which reads, "For behold, he prayeth", the speaker remarked "what a vast amount of suggested history can be crowded into one sentence!" Referring to the disciple Paul, the Rev. Axtell described him as being extremely zealous, always endeavoring to do what was right. Whatever sins he committed were attributed to his zeal for what he supposed to be right. And as a worker, he labored more abundantly than any of the other disciples.

"Paul was a member of the first band of ordained men because he prayed", said Mr. Axtell. "He turned more people to the church than any other disciple. If Paul had been asked what possession of his had enabled him to do this, he would undoubtedly have said 'praying'."

"The other disciples saw Jesus in the flesh. Here was a man who had seen Jesus and had believed in Him in a spiritual way. Paul's experiences with Christ are those by which we come to Christ. At the time he entered Damascus, he was humble and penitent because the Lord had appeared to him and showed him he was wrong. And he was praying that his zeal might be turned to some good purpose".

The passage "for behold he prayeth", suggested something about prayer, in the mind of the speaker, for it gives an indication of what a man is. The attention of God and of humanity is attracted to a man because he prays. Paul was recognized and pointed out as a praying man. The man who prays is the man we go to, the speaker explained.

"Prayer swings around the dial of a man's character and points at Reformation, at change," Mr. Axtell went on. "If a man bears the mark of his change upon him it will have an effect upon those about him."

"The prayer that transfigures the face, that makes people think of building temples . . ., is a spiritual prayer. This kind of praying marks a change."

The speaker then told of his acquaintance with an elderly man who had begun to pray in early life and had come down to his old age with a distinctive marking and a serenity which could not be mistaken. "Men may say that it does no good to pray but you cannot make me believe that", he declared.

"This passage from Scripture, 'Behold, he prayeth'," Mr. Axtell continued, "is one of the most remarkable in all Scripture" . . . God is interested in a praying man. God cannot help but be interested in one who calls to Him. The fact that we call is the important thing."

The speaker went on to say that God would rather help his most dangerous enemy than to annihilate him. Citing the transfiguration of the disciple, Paul, he declared this to have been wrought with the help of God, who sets his agents at work healing broken spirits. This confirms the truthfulness of the passage that, "Heaven and Earth conspire to help the praying man."

"Sometimes God sends us backward in order to get somewhere", Rev. Axtell asserted and he continued in part as follows . . . "How soothing it is when God sends the answer to our prayer through a fellow mortal . . . We need the human touch which has been touched by the divine . . . This is the kind of miracle which strengthens our faith".

College Presents Vegetable Show

Recommends Certain Varieties For New York State

A hybrid strain of golden bantam sweet corn which shows the result of inbreeding and crossing on corn, is a feature of the vegetable crops exhibit now showing at the state college of agriculture, under the supervision of Professor Paul Work.

Inbred strains of corn, according to Professor Work, decline in vigor but gain in uniformity. When two suitable inbred strains are crossed the resultant strain shows great vigor, uniformity and productiveness, as well as highly desirable characters in size and shape of ear and in table quality. In spite of its higher cost, canners have been using hybrid seed for a number of years and home gardeners are beginning to use it, Professor Work says. Golden bantam F-1 hybrid seed, he adds, is now available from seedmen.

The exhibit includes outstanding vegetable varieties which seem particularly adapted to the climate of New York state. Some of these are: Tendergreen beans, a green snap bean; pencil pod beans, a wax snap bean; California wonder pepper; ponderosa tomato, a large, meaty tomato; table queen and kitchenette squash; and New England pie pumpkin. The Fordhook watermelon was one of the best varieties of early watermelons in the display, according to Professor Work.

Han tsai, leafy vegetable from western China, is one of the oddities of the show.

The vegetables were grown in the gardens of the department of vegetable crops at Ithaca, and the exhibit was prepared by students in the course on types and varieties of vegetables. These students returned to college a week early in order to gather the vegetables before frost, judge the various types and varieties, and prepare the show.

Parents Must Know Diet Fundamentals

Responsibility of Teaching Health Rules Does Not Rest Wholly Upon Schools

By Mary G. McCormick
Supervisor of Health Teaching, New York State Department of Education

Thousands of children throughout our country are returning to school this month, to take up tasks where they left off last Spring, or to begin the long and necessary school life that will give them the experiences which will produce that true growth, mental and physical, which is the good of education.

Since the foundation of the Republic the necessity and importance of public education has been realized. More recently we have begun to recognize that health is one of the cardinal objectives of education. Education without health is unsafe. Not only must the school child be protected from ill health which might result from confinement in school so many hours a day; he must also be taught the lessons of health so that his body will grow stronger and more resistant to disease as a result of his school experience.

To further this aim, many up-to-date school systems have departments of physical and health instruction, and virtually every state educational system has a state supervisor of health education to work with teachers in watching over the health of school children.

It is important, of course, that the schools undertake this work. Health teaching is as much a part of the school's field as any other kind of teaching. But the responsibility does not rest wholly upon the teachers. Parents must also help. In this field parents have a special opportunity to aid in bringing up strong, healthy children.

How can parents help? They must first learn the fundamentals of good health for themselves and practice them in the home.

This is the first of a series of articles on the health of school children prepared for this paper. In her next article, Miss McCormick will state the fundamental rules of good health.

To clean spoons or forks tarnished by egg, stand them in an aluminum cup filled with hot water in which a teaspoon of baking soda has been dissolved. This takes out the sulphur stain, such as may come from rubber.

TELL ME AN INDIAN STORY

Dr. E. A. Bates Cornell
(Copyright, 1932)

The Thousand Islands

Long moons ago in the broad river that flows near the banks "where the hemlock grows", or Canada, from the "bright, shiny waters" or Ontario, to "where the waters are rapid", or Caugh-na-waga, one long island extended the whole lenth of the river.

On this long island was plenty of deer, bear and feathered fowl and between the rocks in the center of the island corn, beans and squashes grew in abundance. Maple trees were plentiful on the island and each spring came the sweet waters of the woodland. Then, too, the river on either side of this long island abounded the swift moving bass and even those fish that have the sunset painted on their stomachs.

For many moons the red man found peace and happiness on this long island, but there came a moon where greed arose in the hearts of the Indians.

Each began to claim a portion of the long island, for his own and refused to allow others to hunt game or gather sap on his land. They held many councils but to no avail. At length men began to shoot arrows at one another instead of at the deer.

The patient Great Spirit looked with anger at length on the selfish red men. So he called a council of all the beavers on both sides of the river and told them of his plan and asked for help.

That night while the red men slept, the beavers cut channels in all directions through the long island.

The waters still flow and the beavers still smile on the many little islands that formerly made one great island in the long river. And when the paleface came he called the river St. Lawrence after a good white man; and because there were so many islands, he ever after called them the thousand islands.

Hydrangea Bloom

C. B. M. Brooklyn, writes: Two hydrangeas of mine do not bloom. I cut them back in the spring. Why do they fail to bloom? How and when should I prune them? What is a good plant food for them?

Kenneth Post of the department of floriculture says it is hard to tell just why the plants do not bloom. First of all, it will be necessary for me to know what type of plants you have. If they are the greenhouse sorts they should not be pruned until after they have bloomed. If they are the ordinary hardy outdoor varieties such as paniculata or arborescens, the time to prune them is in early spring and cut them back to about two joints of the previous year's growth. This should be done just before the time the buds begin to swell in the spring.

For feeding hydrangeas I would suggest that you use a complete fertilizer of about a 4-12-4 or 5-10-5 content at the rate of 3 pounds to 100 square feet of area, working this in the soil once in the early spring just at the time growth starts.

Dairy Herd Improvement

A. C. S. writes: Please tell me about dairy herd improvement associations and what they can do for the individual dairyman?

An example of what dairy herd improvement associations can do for dairymen is shown in the experiences of Frank Stevens of Greenville, Michigan, says J. W. Avery of the central New York farm bureau dairy record club.

Stevens joined a dairy herd improvement association in April, 1932. At that time a test showed that each of his fourteen cows produced an average of 13.6 pounds of butterfat for the month. A year later, wit h one cow dry, the average April production for each cow of the herd was 35 pounds of butterfat and 1000 pounds of milk.

"We doubled the production for the year", says Mr. Stevens in Hoard's Dairyman, "with little over half the number of cows and with no increase in feed costs and a considerable saving in labor."

Mr. Avery makes two recommendations for improving dairy production. He suggests that the dairyman should cull out the poorer cows to the point where there will be ample roughage for the stock retained, and should feed cows grain if they are entitled to it.

He predicts that grain prices will probably go higher and advises that a winter supply of grain should be laid in now if possible. Hay will be enough cheaper than grain, he believes, so that it will be unprofitable to feed inferior roughage.

Around Our House

School Mornings

With the children back at school the time before they set out in the morning becomes the homemaker's busiest hour. Junior has lost the algebra paper he finished last night, Mary Anne needs a clean handkerchief, Buster can find only one rubber, and Jane announces that she has no time to eat breakfast and will go without it. Meanwhile, the three-year-old is waiting to be dressed.

Habits formed in early childhood, even before three years of age, should prevent this confusion, says the New York state college of home economics, though the time for habit-formation is never gone. Children who start for school in the morning may learn to collect, before they go to bed at night, everything they will need to take. This means books, papers, pencils, handkerchiefs and clothing. If each child has his own hook in the coat closet, low enough to reach conveniently, and is expected to hang his coat and hat on it when he comes in, coats and hats are not apt to wander. Rubbers may be easily identified if a piece of adhesive tape with name or initials is placed inside each rubber, or if the two rubbers are fastened together with a marked clip-clothes-pin.

The three-year-old may begin to manage his own dressing if his clothing is suitable and simple; if hooks in his closets are where he can reach them; and if mother lays out his clothes for him the night before.

Sweet cider may be preserved by canning. Put it into clean glass jars, adjust the rubbers and covers, and process in a hot-water bath at 175 degrees F. for 25 minutes. Remove the jars from the water and Seal them.

Fruit---Flowers---Garden

BURNING LEAVES

The smoke rising from a thousand piles of burning leaves is an indication of our thoughtlessness regarding the value of organic matter in the garden. Leaves may be conserved best in the form of a compost pile, which is always a great asset to any gardener. If properly used it brings together all of the bits of waste vegetable matter, such as tops from root crops, corn stalks, pea vines (if there are no animals to eat them) weeds, straw, waste hay, leaves, vegetable garbage or any other waste vegetable matter. These can be piled together in an out of the way corner of the garden. Throw a little dirt over the top to keep flies away, to keep the pile from drying out, and to encourage decomposition. If the pile gets rather dry, a few pails of water will help.

The length of time required for such materials to break down in the compost and form a good vegetable manure depends on the kind of materials (leaves and corn stalks require longer than weeds), on the temperature and on the moisture. The pile will usually not be decayed enough to plow or spade into the soil the first year. Therefore it is best to have two piles, one new and the other a year old. The old pile may be forked over once or twice to hasten uniform decay.

The humus or organic matter in a compost pile improves the texture and water-holding capacity of the soil of vegetable or flower gardens. It supplements but does not replace commercial fertilizer.

Night Lights Are Becoming Popular

By Paul G. Riley, Formerly Professor Poultry Extension, Purdue University.

Poultrymen Find Their Use Advantageous — Permit Use of Lower Watt Bulbs.

The use of all night lights is becoming much more popular both with the farmer poultryman and the commercial poultryman. It costs less to use all night lights than it does morning lights, because only a ten to fifteen-watt bulb is used instead of the twenty-five to forty, commonly used for morning lights. One of these ten to fifteen-watt bulbs to each twenty feet of length of the poultry house seems to be sufficient.

All night lights have another advantage in that ordinary barn lanterns can be used just as effectively as electric lights, and that makes it possible for any one to use them. All night lights seem to make it possible for the poultryman to get eggs in quantities when he wants them. It has proven highly profitable on young or older hens to turn the lights on them beginning any time from the middle of August to the 15th of September and when this is done a 25 to 50 per cent production can be maintained with the use of lights, regardless of how well or how poorly they have laid prior to that time, until around Thanksgiving to Christmas time.

It seems to have had a beneficiary influence also in the spring on birds used for breeding. As far as pullets are concerned, it brings them into production more rapidly than is possible without lights and will maintain greater body weight and more ontinuous production, during the period when egg prices are high.

All night lights is not a matter of forcing, because the poultryman who is using them finds that not more than 5 per cent of the flock is down any one time of the night, more extra water is consumed than feed. It simply makes it possible for the hen to get a drink at any time it is wanted.

Tomato Juice Is Health Food And A Beverage For Epicures

Commissioner Baldwin Says Research Has Revealed The Special Value of This Food

By CHARLES H. BALDWIN
Commissioner, Department of Agriculture and Markets Albany, New York

ESPECIALLY valuable for babies, a health food for adults and a beverage for epicures is the juice of beautiful red New York State tomatoes.

It is Dr. Alfred Hess of national fame who is perhaps responsible for the high standing of the tomato as a food item, and particularly of tomato juice as a beverage. His work among babies and young children revealed the necessity for more of the precious vitamin C, which protects against scurvy and tooth decay. When he made his great contributions, orange juice was recognized as the best means of providing this vitamin, but orange juice, not being a native product, was expensive. In seeking a substitute, Dr. Hess began experimenting with tomato juice, and found that it was ideal for this purpose. Its richness in vitamins A, B and particularly the very necessary vitamin C, its ability to blend satisfactorily with the baby's milk, and its palatability, have all been demonstrated in careful work with babies and children.

Good for Babies

According to Dr. Hess, a baby more than three months old may be fed two tablespoonfuls of tomato juice a day, and as much as six ounces a day may be fed to a baby under one year of age.

Dr. Eddy of Columbia University recommends an ounce a day for babies. He further states that one glass—ten ounces—of tomato juice is equal in vitamin content to the vitamin C of three oranges, the vitamin B of three yeast cakes, and the vitamin A of one teaspoon of cod liver oil.

Three Healthful Acids

It is the work of Dr. Hess, of Dr. Eddy and Dr. Sherman of Columbia University, Dr. E. V. McCullom of Johns Hopkins, and others, together with the fact that people like the taste of tomato juice, that has made it, not only one of the physician's strongest allies in maintaining health and combating disease, but one of the most popular of beverages.

Inasmuch as it is rich in these very necessary vitamins A, B and C, and not a fat-producing food, it is in high favor with those who wish to be thin, and yet well nourished. Dr. G. W. Wagner of the United States Medical Corps gives some interesting information on the acidity of tomatoes. He states that they contain three healthful acids: malic, found in apples; citric, found in lemons, oranges and grapefruit, which is a diuretic antiseptic; and phosphoric, used in the treatment of nervous disorders.

Dr. Loran of Germany says it is the healthful blending of all these acids which makes tomatoes so deliciously palatable, refreshing and appetizing, and is the reason why we do not tire of them nor overeat of them.

Dairymen Should Watch Feeding Practices

Tendency Has Been to Feed Less Grain Because of Low Milk Prices—Many Cows Are in Poor Flesh as a Consequence.

Feed prices are high compared to the price of milk, the Steuben County Farm Bureau states, and dairymen are advised to carefully watch their feeding practices so as to get the largest possible returns from every pound of grain fed to their cows.

The tendency in this county has been for dairymen to feed less grain to their cows because of the low milk prices that have prevailed during the past year. Some dairymen have fed so little grain that their milk production is at a low level and the cows are poor in flesh. To allow the high producing cows to become thin is false economy. It will take some time and much grain to bring these cows back to their full producing capacity.

Records a Guide

In feeding grain to cows as pastures become short, it is important to know just how much milk each cow is producing and what each cow tests in butterfat. With this information the dairyman is able to accurately determine the right amount of grain which each cow should have for most economic results. Now that feed prices are moving upward it is good business to check cows carefully to see that no grain is wasted on poor producers. With records of production on each cow in the herd, the money spent for grain can be made to return the greatest results. Members of the farm bureau dairy record services say that they can save the cost of the entire service just through the help they receive in feeding alone.

The farm bureau reports that farmers are making increased use of the record services and that more new members have joined the dairy herd improvement associations and the dairy record club this fall than in any previous time. These services are available to all farmers of the county and information in regard to them will be sent upon request.

CORRECTION
